

Breivik: What's behind clenched-fist salutes?

By Jon Kelly BBC News Magazine

- 17 April 2012
- From the section Magazine

The man who admits killing 77 people in Norway began his trial with a closed-fist salute. What's behind this gesture?

He smiled as the handcuffs were released.

Then Anders Behring Breivik clenched his right hand, held it to his chest and extended his arm to raise it above the Oslo court.

In the world's media, the motion was interpreted as a demonstration that the man who killed scores of people in gun and bomb attacks in July 2011 felt no remorse or repentance.

<http://www.bbc.com/news/magazine-17739105>