“Healthcare is free? I no longer have to worry about the cost of me or my family getting sick.”

“Great news for small companies here because it will help us compete against the bigger companies. Those big companies don't contribute enough to help run the services and infrastructure on which they depend.”

“I'm so glad I live in a country that pays men and women equally. WOOHOO!”

The laws of the land

You've had a long day, and must be all decided out. But before we order someone to run you a nice, hot bath with your favourite bubbles, here's a report of what you have done for your country so far.

Will you set a minimum wage for your people?

Your answer:

We will go further than a minimum wage and set a living wage that is more closely linked to the cost of living.

27% agree with you.

Real world context

A minimum wage is set to ensure people are paid at least a certain amount. Without this, employers can exploit workers with unfair wages.

Will healthcare be free and accessible to all your people?

Your answer:

Absolutely – even visitors will have access to free, top quality healthcare.

Real world context

Free healthcare keeps people healthy and cared for. It breaks the poverty cycle, ensuring people are fit to work and healthcare isn't an expense.

31% agree with you.

Will you control salaries to limit how much more big bosses can earn than their average employee?

Your answer:

No-one needs that much money – executive pay will be capped at 5 times the average employee's earnings.

Real world context

Executives getting extra money already live well above the line of comfortable living. It should be distributed to help people at the bottom.

33% agree with you.

Will you make multinational corporations who make money in your country pay their fair share of tax to your government?

Your answer:

Yes, and we'll need to work with other governments to make sure tax rules are fair around the world.

Real world context

Multinational corporations can avoid paying tax, therefore they gain from a country's economy without putting money back in.

35% agree with you.

The country's workforce is rebelling against their poor working conditions. What do we do?

Your answer:

Let them organise together in a union so that they can lobby for better pay and working conditions.

Real world context

For exploited workers, staying in the job is unfair but leaving means they are jobless. Trade Unions step in to fight the workers corner.
