The atrocities committed in Nanking are very, very well-documented.

Was Chesty not slaughtering the Japs in the Pacific, tho?

I would really, really appreciate it if you would not use that derogatory term for the Japanese people.

Yes, but he didn't witness what occurred in China.

I don't know the history of the man nearly well enough to make a judgement call, but his experiences against the Japanese in the Pacific are not similar to those experienced by the Chinese in China. The Japanese were far more brutal in their treatment of the Chinese than they were in their treatment of the Americans.

The point continues to go over your head; your original point was that the soldiers in question were not guilty. My contention was Chesty argued to the difference and made it his profession to handle them. As well, if you think what was going on in China was worse than the battlefields of the Pacific, you're gravely mistaken.

Poster uses derogatory term for Japanese by Democratic Communist Federation » Mon Sep 03, 2018 3:11 pm

As I said to the poster, I would really, really appreciate it if he did not use that derogatory term in a posting on this page. It is like the N-word for the Japanese. His response on the same page: Get over it.

Get over it.

While I do understand the historical context of the word 'Japs'. it's not as though you were discussing WW II propaganda posters or something. just because you are referring to atrocities doesn't give you free range to throw around derogatory racial slurs. Furthermore, when someone points out that your using a potentially offensive word in a way that offends them and your only response is 'get over it' I have trouble seeing your intent as anything but to offend or annoy.  1-day ban for trolling. *****
